The Confederate monument on High Street was decorated at 9 o'clock this morning by 150 children from the primary grades of the State Female Normal School. They were all dressed in white, and each one carried a handful of flowers to lay upon and around the monument. In the presence of scores of old soldiers the children marched from the school singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and at the conclusion of the inspiring exercises by the little ones, the veterans gave three ringing cheers and the rebel yell. ### USED HIS CHECKS FREELY.

And Those Honoring Them Found Themselves Out of Pocket.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
BRISTOL, Va., May 27.—"C. D. Smith" is the way a clever stranger signed his name to worthless checks which he used here in procuring money and fine clothing from the local business men. He paid his hotel bill with a worthless check and took the change, having made the check for several dollars more than the amount of his board bill. Here he used checks on a bank at Newport, Tenn., and exhibited a deposit book indicating that he had nearly $2,000 in bank to his credit. He wore that self-composed, non-assuming air that trapped every business man who came in contact with him. Although he represented himself as coming from Newport, Tenn., evidences have been found to the effect that he recently operated in West Virginia, where he is said to have had many worthless checks cashed. He is a sandy-haired individual of medium size, and is a swell dresser.
